Commercial Conversion

Cellulosic ethanol technology that began being developed in 2006 is on its way to becoming commercial, following the final approval of $20.5 million in cost sharing from the U.S. DOE. Last April, the DOE released $2.8 million of the award to EdeniQ Inc. and Logos Technologies Inc. to design and engineer its trademarked Corn-to-Cellulosic Migration pilot plant.

USDA adds DDGS footnote to supply/demand report

Nineteen words were added to a footnote in the World Agricultural Supply and Demand Estimates report, which includes information on the corn used in ethanol. For the first time, the April 8 monthly report on U.S. corn supply and use specified that corn used to produce ethanol also produces by-products such as DDGS, corn gluten feed, corn gluten meal and/or corn oil.
